Read this entire information sheet before completing the application. Keep a copy for your records.

What is the American Indian Endowed Scholarship (AIES) program?

AIES provides educational scholarships on a competitive basis to outstanding students with close social and cultural ties to an American Indian tribe or community in Washington State. Recipients are selected using criteria based on academic merit and a commitment to serve the American Indian community in Washington. Scholarship awards come from the interest earnings of an endowment established from funds appropriated by the Washington State Legislature, with matching contributions from private individuals, organizations, and tribes.

Who is eligible to apply?

Applicants must:

- Have close social and cultural ties to an American Indian tribe, or an American Indian community, in Washington State.
- Intend to use their education to benefit other American Indians in Washington.
- Have demonstrated financial need (as determined by the college financial aid office).
- Be a Washington State resident. [See Chapter 250-18 Wash. Administrative Code (WAC)]
- Be enrolled as a full-time student at an eligible Washington college or university by fall term of the award year, and for every term in which the student receives the scholarship.
- Not be pursuing a degree in theology.
- Have received fewer than five years of this scholarship in total.

How do I apply for the scholarship?

- Complete the application form, and print a hard copy for signature and mailing. The form requires Adobe Acrobat Reader software, Version 11.0 or newer. If you do not have Adobe Reader software, a free download is available at www.Adobe.com.
 - Renewal applicants must have their academic dean, department head, or advisor complete and sign the supplemental attachment certifying their academic progress.
- Attach a detailed statement carefully describing your close social and cultural ties to an American Indian community within the state.
 - If your original ties are to an out-of-state tribal community, also include a description how you have established close social and cultural ties within the American Indian community within Washington State.
- Attach a separate statement describing how you intend to use your education to serve the American Indian community in Washington.
- Attach all cumulative academic transcripts from the last five years. Official transcripts or copies of official transcripts are acceptable.
 - If it has been more than five years since you last attended college, attach a transcript from the most recent college attended that includes your full, accumulative higher education history.
 - If you have fewer than two years of college, you also must attach a copy of your high school transcript or GED scores with your college transcript(s).
- Attach letters of recommendation from individuals who are not members of your immediate family.

- Applicants for first-time awards. A minimum of three recommendation letters are required. Of these, at least one must address your personal commitment to serve the American Indian community in Washington, and at least two must describe your social and cultural ties to the American Indian community in state. A fourth letter from a recent teacher, addressing academic performance, is encouraged.
- Renewal applicants. A minimum of one current letter of recommendation is required, describing your close social and cultural ties to the American Indian community in the state, as well as your personal commitment to serve the community. Only one current letter is required, however, multiple letters are encouraged.
- Sign and mail a hard copy of the application, with all required attachments, to the American Indian Endowed Scholarship (AIES) program at the Washington Student Achievement Council.
- Apply for state and federal need-based financial aid using the FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid). The college or university you attend next academic year will use the information to determine the amount of your financial need. Financial need is among the criteria for selection as an AIES scholarship recipient. The FAFSA is available online at www.fafsa.ed.gov.

How are recipients selected?

The AIES scholarships are awarded on a competitive basis. A selection committee composed of representatives from the American Indian and higher education communities in Washington will review and score applications. Selection criteria emphasize the applicant's social and cultural ties and commitment to return service to the American Indian community within the state, as documented by the applicant's two personal statements and supported by the letter(s) of recommendation. Additional criteria include academic merit and a priority for upper-division and graduate students.

How much will I receive if I am awarded?

The committee decides the total number and value of scholarships awarded each year after a discussion of current scholarship issues and an analysis of endowment interest earnings received during the prior year.

Historically, the scholarships have been awards of $500–$2,000 each for one academic year. Awards will not exceed the recipient's financial need as calculated by their college student aid office. In some cases, the scholarship may be adjusted to prevent conflict with the receipt of other student financial aid.

The recipient must be enrolled as a full-time student no later than fall term of the award year at an eligible, participating college or university in Washington State, and be financially needy as determined by the college financial aid office, at the time of scholarship disbursement. Funds are disbursed each academic term through the recipient's college.

NOTE: Please be aware that it is your responsibility to report all sources of educational scholarships to the financial aid office or the college you are attending. If you receive new scholarships after your initial eligibility has been determined, it may result in the rescission of any AIES awards if your full need is met through other awards.

Individual recipients may receive up to a cumulative maximum of five academic years of scholarship assistance through the program. Recipients must submit a renewal application for award consideration each year. Any renewal is for one academic year, decided on a competitive basis, and at the discretion of the committee after a thorough review of the applicant's renewal application, letter(s) of recommendation, academic merit, and continued commitment to return service to the American Indian community in Washington.

Postmark your application no later than February 1.

Late or incomplete applications are not considered.
